Kenneth A. Adams is a consultant and speaker on contract drafting.

He gives public seminars in the U.S. with West Legalworks and in Canada with Osgoode Professional Development, as well as internationally. He conducts in-house seminars worldwide for companies, law firms, and government agencies. He helps companies improve their contracts and their contract process. And he acts as an expert in contract disputes.

He's a lecturer in law at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, where he teaches the first-ever course in contract drafting offered by the law school. He writes extensively on contract drafting and maintains a blog on the subject, at www.adamsdrafting.com.

After graduating from the University of Pennsylvania Law School in 1989, he practiced as a corporate attorney with major U.S. law firms in New York and Geneva, Switzerland.
