

Andrew S. Tulumello is a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. He is a Vice-Chair of the firm's Class Action and Complex Litigation Practice Group and a Vice-Chair of the firm's Crisis Management Group.

Mr. Tulumello has extensive experience defending purported class actions in federal and state courts, at both the trial and appellate levels. These class actions have involved a wide variety of issues, including unfair competition and consumer fraud, RICO, ERISA, employment discrimination, products liability, and securities. He has handled numerous matters before the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation and frequently has represented companies confronting parallel lawsuits and investigations by the Justice Department, SEC, state attorneys general, and the private class action bar. For the last six years, Mr. Tulumello has served as an Adjunct Professor of Law at Georgetown University Law Center, where he co-teaches a course on Class Action Law and Practice.

Mr. Tulumello's litigation practice has received widespread recognition. In 2009, Benchmark Litigation selected him as one of Washington D.C.'s top litigators based on peer reviews and client interviews and described him as "clearly one of those once in a generation litigators." In 2007, he was nominated by Washington Business Journal as one of three finalists for "Top Lawyer of the Year" in the field of corporate litigation. In 2006, Mr. Tulumello was selected by Washingtonian Magazine as one of its "40 under 40" rising stars of the Washington, D.C. bar and also by Washington Business Journal as a co-winner of its "Top Lawyer of the Year" award in the category for new partners.