

Environmental Justice Symposium

April 1, 2011 | Oxford, Mississippi

The American Bar Association Section of Environment, Energy, and Resources (ABA-SEER) and the University of Mississippi School of Law are proud to announce a national Environmental Justice Symposium in Oxford, Mississippi on April 1, 2011. This Symposium will provide an unparalleled opportunity for attorneys, law students, community representatives, state and federal government representatives, corporate leaders, and academics to discuss how to improve the environmental justice dialogue in our nation in the future—in a location where dramatic civil rights events occurred in the past. The Mississippi Law Review will publish a special issue dedicated to the thoughts and ideas presented at the Symposium. A writing competition open to law students nationwide is being held in advance of this event, and the winning writers will be recognized at the Symposium. Due to limited space and the intentionally intimate nature of the Symposium, registration priority is first being given to invited speakers, co-sponsors, student leaders, and SEER leadership. A limited number of registrations will be available to others upon request. If you are interested in attending the Symposium, please send an email to Julie Connell, Section Program Assistant at ConnellJ@staff.abanet.org with a brief paragraph expressing your interest. We hope to confirm all attendees by March 1, 2011.
